

Zdeněk Lánský

Zdeněk Lánský is a group leader at the Institute of Biotechnology, Czech Academy of Sciences. Originally trained as a physicist, he got interested in biology and now studies cytoskeleton, a filamentous intracellular structure, which gives cells their shape and enables their movement.

In particular, he is interested in molecular mechanisms of cytoskeleton-driven transport processes, which are essential for functioning of highly elongated cells, such as neurons.

